Linno Rhodes

This session is designed for teachers in adult learning environments and will help us understand how trauma and stress can be barriers for successful learning and teaching.

We will explore what it means to feel safe when we teach and learn, and how the simple power of connecting with others through an authentic relationship creates the opportunity for growth and success in the adult classroom.

Linno Rhodes works in adult community education in Victoria and is especially interested in the impact of trauma on learning. She is a recipient of a Specialised Skills Institute fellowship which was in the area of adult literacy and neuroscience.

The Zoom link will be sent to registrants prior to the session.
